Figure 1 displays a 90x80 grid representing the spatial distribution of 1000 simulated individuals. The grid is divided into 10 rows (1-90) and 80 columns (1-80). The distribution is highly heterogeneous, with individuals clustered in specific regions, particularly in the upper right and lower left quadrants. The grid is color-coded: black for occupied cells, white for empty cells, and gray for cells containing a single individual. The distribution is highly heterogeneous, with individuals clustered in specific regions, particularly in the upper right and lower left quadrants.
