Tarot—7: Chariot

(Large Format)

Tarot Series

By Michele Sayetta

The Fool is close to completing what she set out to create long ago, back when the Magician revealed those tools to him. But enemies are now standing in her way, devious human enemies, bad circumstances, even confusion in her own mind. There's no more forward momentum; she feels she is fighting just to stay where she is. Walking along the shore, watching the waves come in, she puzzles over how to defeat these enemies and get things moving forward once again. It is here that she comes across a charioteer, standing in her gold and silver chariot, her black and white steeds at rest. "You seem a victorious warrior," the Fool remarks. "Tell me, what is the best way to defeat an enemy?" The Charioteer nods out at the ocean. "Have you ever been swimming in the water and been trapped in that tide which pulls you out to sea? If you try to swim forward, head-on, you go nowhere. You swim forward, the tide pulls you back and, if you tire yourself out, you drown. The only way to win without sapping all your energy is to swim parallel to shore, and come in slowly, diagonally. So, too, when fighting in a chariot. You win by coming up alongside that which you wish to defeat." The warrior nods to her beasts. "Your steeds keep the wheels turning, but it is your control and direction that brings victory. Dark and light, they must be made to draw in harmony, under your guidance." The Fool is impressed and inspired. She thinks she now knows how to win her own war. She thanks the warrior, but before she leaves, the warrior stays the Fool, "One thing more," she says, "no victory can be won unless you have unwavering confidence in your cause. And remember above all, victory is not the end, it is the beginning."
